

There are few things as miserable as digging even the most reasonable of holes in Washington State. You really have not experienced frustration until you've tried to hand dig in rocky soil.

I eventually caved and bought a pick axe which turned it from cursing and blisters into quite an enjoyable anger management release.

Next step is to make sure the damn thing doesn't leak, and to landscape and make it look not terrible.